BROADWAY THEATER. "The Traveling Salesman."

In connection with the coming appearance in this city, on Monday, March 8th, at the Broadway theater of Jumes Porbes' successful comedy. "The Traveling Salesman," it may be of interest to the theater-goerg of this city to know the real story of how this comedy success of the century came to be written. It will be remembered that it was Mr. Forbes who wrote "The Chorus Lady," in which Rose Stahl is now starring, and which contributed greatly to her elevation among the leading artists of the country. One day, while on the train coming from Chicago, where "The Chorus Ledy" was playing, Mr. Forbes was introduced to several greatlemen representing commercial, booses, and one of them said: "Mr. Porbes it seems to me that it might houses, and one of them said: "Mr. Porbes, it seems to me that it might be a good idea for some playwright to H. P. Williams is in Colchester, write a play deading with the drummers. Possibly you are not aware that there are over three hundred thousand of these in the United States, and there is hardly a day passes that one of these knights of the road does not meet with an experience of a most interesting character with an extremely humorous side to it. Now if you would take some of these experiif you would take some of these experiences and weave them fato a story, I am sure that the public would be as quick to appreciate such a play as would the drammers." A little while after the subject was dismissed, and everal months passed before this conversation was recalled. The idea grew upon Mr. Forbes, until finally he was impelled with a desire to create such a play. His next move was to acquaint impelled with a desire to create such a play. His next move was to acquaint bimself with a number of commercial men whose acquaintanceship he cultivated. One day he asked one of them if he would object to his accompanying the gentlemen on a trip, and permission was readily aganted. The journey covered nearly ten weeks over a number of states, in which many towns were visited. Plenty of atmosphere was gathered up, and Mr. Forbes having become thoroughly familiar with road life, immediately set to work, with the result "The Traveling Salesman." road life, immediately set to work, with the result "The Truveling Salesman," which is now in its seventh month of uninterrupted prosperity in New York. One of the fowns visited was so pictur-eque that it was taken as the locale for the play. Seats on sale at the box office and usual places on Friday, March

'The Great Divide."

JOHN INCH.

"The Great Divide," the play of the decade, if not of the century, will be presented by Henry Miller at the Broadway theater this evening. A superb production, equalling in every detail the one that won the praise of critics and artists at the Princess and Daly's theaters, and the Academy of Music, New York, the past two years, and a cast of unusual strength and ability will be seen here. The story of the play is of great interest. In the first act Ruth Jordan goes about singing for very joy. Life in the wide west has taken on new meanings for her and she is drunk with love of it. A young dector from the east asks her to marry him, but she turns from him. He is tediously patient and faultiess. Alone in the little home on the Gila desert she sings happly over her work. She goes to the open door to gaze at the stars as she brushes her hair. A steatthy step startles her. She shuts the door and bars it. There is a babble of drunken voices, the door yields to force and three rowdles in miner's dress burst into the cabin. They rush at the girl with jocular endearments, trying to kiss her. Crouching in terror in a corner she appeals to one of the trio to save her from the others. She oners to marry him, to go away with him, end never tell the manner of their meeting. The man, Stephen Gheat, agrees, but the others protest. The girl pleads with the man to give her up but he holds her to ber promise. He has saved her from the others, bought her and paid for her, and she is his. The settings of the play are appro-priate to its matter. The first scene priate to its matter. The first scene is a ranch house in Arizona; the second a plateau—The Roof of the World—high up in the Catalina mountains; and the third, the parior of an old colonial home in Milford Corners. Mass. The scenes help to emphasize the keynote of the play—the spirit of the untrammelled west in conflict with the spirit established east.

BREED THEATER.

High Class Moving Pictures and Illustrated Songs.

Goon clean fun, plenty of it, is what is being offered this week at the Breed theater in the screaming pictures, Mrs. Jones Entertains and The Human Wheel, both of which are full of laughable situations. The beautiful colored moving picture, The Bewildered Professor, is a spectacular one, and full of pretty girls, entrancing pictures, brilliant costumes and spirited acting. This is a most charming picture and elleits many expressions of wonderment and admiration. The feature picture of the week is, no doubt, The Cord of Life, and is one of those pictures in which there are no dull moments, the characthere are no dull moments, the characters being vivacious, the costuming cor-rect, and the participants very attrac-tive. This is a story of gypsy life, en-acted upon most picturesque gounds. The Ingrate is the title of the other very strong picture, and is a story of camp life in the districts where bears abound, and deals with the every day life of trappers, and contains much that will interest and entertain sportsmen.

Madam Morelle made a filt with her sympathetic ballad. So Soon We Are Forgotten, with beautiful slides to accompany same, afterwards singing Robyn's Answer, to the delight of all. Mr. Coopper's pretentious song for the week is With You to the End of the World, a most pleasing tenor song, and splendidly rendered.
